Accompanying Instruments -

Tabla (tablā) - It is a very popular north Indian Classical percussion instruments used for accompaniment of vocal as well as instrumental music. Tabla consists of a pair of drums, a tabla or a smaller drum and a larger drum called the Dugga. The tabla is tuned to a specific note, usually the tonic, dominant or subdominant of the soloist's key and thus complements the melody. The Dugga is used to create the base notes of the instrument. The notes produced on the Tabla are called Bol. These are produced by the striking in combination on left and the right drums. There are more than 15 different combinations that can be produced with the tabla. Some common beat cycles used in the Hindustani Classical System are 4 Beats (Kehrva), 6 Beats (Dadra), 7 Beats (Rupak), 10 Beats (Jhaptaal), 12 Beats (Ektaal) and 16 Beats (Teentaal).

Harmonium - It is an instrument similar to the organ. Sound is produced by the air blown through the free reeds.

During the mid-19th century missionaries brought French-made hand-pumped harmoniums to India. The instrument quickly became popular. Many of harmonium's qualities made it suitable for the newly-reformed classical music of the early 20th century - it is easy for amateurs to learn; it supports group singing and large voice classes; it provides a template for standardized raga grammar; it is loud enough to provide a drone in a concert hall. For these reasons, it has become the instrument of choice for accompanying most North Indian classical vocal genres.

Featured Raga

Bhoop or Bhoopali - It is an evening melody based on a pentatonic scale containing Shuddha (major) notes. The Carnatic musical equivalent of this raga is Mohanam. The compositions set to this raga reflect a romantic mood (Shringar Rasa) of harmony and contentment.

Western Scale (Considering C as a base note) - C D E G A C

Avaroha (Descent) - Sa Dha Pa Ga Re SA

A brief Introduction to a few forms of North Indian Classical Music -

Over the past 800 hundred years classical music in India has evolved and flourished, enriching itself with the new cultures and changing times. The music in Northern Part of India came to be known as Hindustani Classical and in the southern part of India was popularized as Carnatic Classical Music.

With the Mughal and Persian influence and with the music gradually travelling from the temples to the Royal Courts the music added more presentation aspect focusing on unique aspects such as poetry, interplay with the accompanying instruments, long arpeggios (sweeping tans) and intricate glissandos (meends), emotional aspect (Bhav) etc. But in spite of these new additions and flourishing the soul of this music still is the notes and the beats and a divinity and purity that a presenter and audience alike experience during a concerto.

Through the course of such publications IMS would like to familiarize its audience with a few common classical concepts and music forms -

Raga - Rāga (Sanskrit, lit. "colour" or "mood"; or rāgam in Carnatic music) refers to melodic modes used in Indian classical music. It is a series of five or more musical notes upon which a melody is made. In the Indian musical tradition, rāgas are associated with different times of the day, or with seasons. Indian classical music is always set in a rāga. Non-classical music such as popular Indian film songs or ghazals sometimes uses rāgas in their compositions.

A raga thus in essence, forms the soul of any classical music presentation. It is the framework that helps establish the mood or the emotion that the artist would present. In the Hindustani classical system the ragas have been divided according to time of day. This is a result of careful study by music scholars through centuries who established the fact that the time of the day governs how our body receives an emotion and how it reacts to it.

For e.g. - Early Morning is a time when we prepare ourselves for the tasks of the day. The mind has to be in a peaceful and relaxed state away from anxiety. Ragas such as Bhirav, Todi, Lalit are examples of early morning ragas.

Early night is considered a romantic period. The stars shining and the moon in the sky evoke a jovial mood. Ragas such as Bihag, Kedar are examples of evening melodies.

Sur Taal Magazine -

As a society, we are constantly on a quest to find means and resources to enable our audience to understand and learn the finer aspects of Indian Classical Music and appreciate its beauty and divinity.

Music workshops, lecture demonstrations and basic music education are some of the means that we are already using very effectively. As a result, we are seeing a growing interest in this music. In continuation with this effort we are pleased to present our latest offering "Sur Taal".

Sur (notes) and Taal (beats) are the life line of music and no music is complete without it. The magazine would be published during each of IMS concert, aimed at proving another medium of information not only about the upcoming concerts and artist but about the music itself.

Through the magazine we would also like to present the basic theory of music, the science involved and the facts of Indian classical music. We hope we are able to increase the interest of the readers in our music form which has been perfected over generations of hard work.
